Schistosoma (Schistosoma) belongs to the phylum Platyhelminthes and the class Trematoda. It is a parasitic flatworm that causes schistosomiasis. The life cycle of Schistosoma involves an aquatic intermediate host, a snail, and a definitive host, a mammal. The adult worms reside in the blood vessels of the definitive host, where they lay eggs. The eggs are excreted in the host's urine or feces. The eggs hatch in water, and the larvae develop into miracidia, which infect snails. Inside the snail, the larvae develop into cercariae, which are released into the water. Cercariae can penetrate the skin of a mammal, where they mature into adult worms.
